

It all adds up.

The profile of an IRS professional: it is as unique as the career itself. Here, you will excel with one of the largest financial institutions in the world. The IRS is where America's growth begins. The dollars we collect support our nation's vital programs — from powering NASA ...to preserving parklands ...to providing matching funds for communities across the country.

Are you ready to step up to an IRS future?

"I was looking for a job in Federal law enforcement that offered the physical aspect of law enforcement and the mental aspect of analysis. Guess what? I found it!"

Assume a special role.

When you join Criminal Investigation (CI) as a Special Agent you will join the ranks of a relatively small core (3,000) of highly specialized expertly trained financial investigators. As members of a key bureau of the U.S. Treasury, IRS Criminal Investigation Special Agents perform a critical role in protecting the integrity of our nation's tax system, and are known as the world's finest financial investigators.

As a duly sworn law enforcement officer, you will leverage your accounting and law enforcement skills like never before. In addition, you will benefit from elite federal training that encompasses the most sophisticated financial investigative techniques including: tracking criminal transactions through cyberspace, as well as self-defense, firearms, and arrest techniques. And since many financial crimes do not stop at U.S. borders, your expertise may also be required to track criminals internationally. You may even find yourself assuming special assignments: on multi-agency task forces with other federal agencies such as DEA, FBI, and ATF; on presidential campaign protective assignments, or as a member of an undercover cadre...

We are hiring in many degree areas, including:

- Accounting • Business
- Computer Science
- Criminal Justice • Criminology
- Economics • Finance
- Information Systems
- Liberal Arts • Political Science

Opportunities for Specialized Computer Investigators

Because of an increase in the automation of financial records, there is a greater demand for Special Agents who are trained in recovering computer evidence. Agents use their investigative skills and specialized equipment to recover data that may have been encrypted, password protected, or hidden by other means, helping to provide evidence that can lead to the conviction of individuals guilty of money laundering or tax law violations. Visit www.irs.gov for information on this unique training program.

Basic qualifications

Applicants must:

- be a U.S. citizen
- be under the age of 37
- meet the appropriate educational and/or experience qualification requirements
- pass the IRS TEA examination (comprised of a written test and skills assessment exercise)
